Take better class photos on your phone

Six habits that show what it feels like to learn with you.

Six habits, one minute each.

01

Get permission first

Ask students before you photograph them, and get a parent or guardian's written OK for anyone under 18. Leave out anyone who says no.

02

Show the learning

Catch the moment a student tries something, a teacher shows a step, or hands are working. Action tells people more than a posed group photo.

03

Use good light

Shoot near windows or under bright, even light, with the flash off. Bright light also keeps moving hands and faces sharp.

04

Show the work

Photograph what students make, play or practise: the painting, the dish, the routine, the notes. Put it on a plain surface and get close.

05

Show the room

Take a wide shot of your space when it is tidy and ready for class. New students and parents want to see where they will be.

06

Record short clips

A few seconds of a song, a move or a finished piece shows progress better than words. Hold the phone steady, landscape or upright, and keep it short.

Or let Suara do it for you.
